

Alexius L. Middleton House
CH-628
Waldorf vic.
Private

Circa 1920

The Alexius L. Middleton House is a two-story, three bay adaptation of an I-house, a very common house form found in Charles County during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. It exhibits many of the locally common features of the I-house such as a decorative center gable adorned with a lunette window and a wide porch on the facade. However, along with the Henry Dyer Middleton House nearby, these dwellings are unique in their use of a projecting bay that extends the full height of the facade. This bay accentuates the decorative gable, and lunette window as well as the first floor entranceway. The dwelling has a L-plan with an original two-story kitchen wing extending from the rear elevation. Despite its location near Waldorf, Charles County's most heavily developed area, the property retains a good deal of its rural character and is surrounded by open fields, a pond to the east and several agricultural buildings. Other structures on the site considered as contributing resources include two tobacco barns and a corncrib.

Believed to have been built by Alexius Llewellyn Middleton during the first quarter of the twentieth century, the site is also significant both architecturally and in relation to several other Middleton family farms in the vicinity including the Henry Dyer Middleton House(CH-615), Cedar Hill Farm (CH-600) and Holly Cut (CH-340).

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Alexius L. Middleton House is a two story, three bay farmhouse with a center gable that projects from the full height of the front elevation. The dwelling has an original L-Plan with a two story kitchen wing extending from the rear elevation. While originally consisting of over 150 acres and known as Part of Ware's Folly, today the house is associated with slightly over three acres. Despite its location near Waldorf, Charles County's most heavily developed area, the property is nestled in an isolated agricultural district and retains a good deal of its rural character. It is surrounded by open fields, a pond to the east and several agricultural buildings. The structures considered to be contributing resources include two tobacco barns and a corncrib. Other standing structures present include two concrete block sheds, a concrete block tobacco stripping shed and a frame workshop.

The two-story frame dwelling has undergone extensive renovation in recent years. The building is currently clad in vinyl siding over the original weatherboards and has an asphalt shingle roof. A hipped roof porch extends the full length of the façade. Original doors and windows have been replaced throughout. While probably consisting of 2/2 light wood sash, replacement windows are of 1/1 light composition. Several additions to the rear have recently been constructed including a large deck off the eastern elevation.

The facade is three bays in length with a projecting gable that stands approximately one foot from the main eave wall. A single lunette window is located in the center gable attic story. First and second story fenestration is vertically symmetrical and includes three second story replacement 1/1 windows above two 1/1 windows flanking a centered door. The primary entrance is marked by a replacement door in its original frame adorned with a three part transom and sidelights. The porch is supported on turned wooden posts.

The west elevation of the main block includes single, centered windows on the first and second story. Moving to the rear, the kitchen wing includes a later enclosed porch shed addition with a pair of three contemporary 6/6 light windows flanking either side of the exterior door. While the first floor of the original wing exterior is no longer visible the second story consists of a single, center window.

The north and east elevations include several later additions and, in the earlier portions of the dwelling, alterations to the original fenestration. The east elevation main block includes a 1/1 light replacement window on the second story. The first floor fenestration has been modified to include a three part projecting bay window.

The interior was not accessible at the time of the survey.

OUTBUILDINGS

All contributing outbuildings appear to date from the early to mid-20th century. The rectangular corncrib is located near the house and stands on a east west axis. It rests on a high concrete block pier foundation and the gable roof is sheathed with a metal seam roof. The entrance is found on the east gable end wall with steps leading up to door.

Two large tobacco barns are located nearby which were originally associated with the dwelling although they are no longer part of the house lot. The first is a large tobacco barn that stands to the west of the corncrib and has a standing seam roof and a concrete foundation. "Drive-through" double doors are centered on the eave walls and found on both the east and west elevations. The second tobacco barn is located south of the dwelling along Tommy Middleton Road. This barn has large drive-through double doors on the gable ends and a shed addition to one side.

Non-contributing resources include a concrete block tobacco stripping shed and two small concrete block sheds. A frame workshop covered in vinyl siding, also considered non-contributing, is found near the stripping shed.

The Alexius L. Middleton House is a good example of late folk Victorian architecture in Charles County. As one of a dwindling number of standing historic structures in the fastest growing and most developed section of the County, the dwelling is an important reminder of the area's rural heritage. Closely related to the Alexius L. Middleton House is the Henry Dyer Middleton House (CH-615) nearby which shows a number of identical features including the presence of a unique projecting bay.

Following the Civil War, Charles County suffered the same fate as most of the southern states. The basis of the economy, slave labor, was gone. Land ceased to be cultivated, credit collapsed and many planters fell deep into debt. Despite this, Charles County and most of the surrounding counties retained their dependence on tobacco cultivation. While some diversification did occur, the reliance on agriculture, mainly tobacco, remained throughout the nineteenth and well into the twentieth century.

While tobacco remained the main export in Charles County throughout the late 19th and early twentieth century, changes in its usage altered production methods and trading. With the outset of World War I, domestic manufacturers began producing vast quantities of cigarettes for the American servicemen in Europe. In turn, the servicemen introduced this product to the Europeans, increasing the demand for Maryland tobacco. Charles County planters responded by increasing the acreage of land under cultivation. No longer was tobacco exported directly to foreign markets, but was first transported to cigarette manufacturers.

In 1847, Joseph Stewart, acting Sheriff of Charles County sold at public auction 165 acres known as part of Ware's Folly once owned by Thomas M. Queen. John D. Bowling, purchaser of the property retained ownership until 1872 when he and his wife Elizabeth sold the property to Mary E. Middleton. In 1905, Mary E. Middleton sold the farm to Alexius L. Middleton who later built a the dwelling that stands today on the property. The property and premises remained in Middleton Family until 1965 when Alexius Middleton's son Charles who had inherited the farm sold 158 acres to Russell and Grace Howard.

Alexius Llewelyn Middleton was born in 1864 as the sixth child of William Jordan and Molly Dyer Middleton. Later in life he was employed at St. Elizabeth's Mental Hospital where he met his wife Mary Jane Martin of nearby Pomfret. After his death in 1945, and the death of his wife in 1959 the property descended to their oldest son Charles Elsworth Middleton. In 1965 Charles sold 158 acres and the dwelling to the Howard family, retaining the rest as a place of residence for himself.

The Alexius L. Middleton House shows many characteristics of late Victorian architecture in the Charles County. The two story frame dwelling one room deep with service wings attached to the rear was by far the most common dwelling for planters of middling means. Also a full-width hipped roof porch was a ubiquitous component of domestic architecture. The center passage was common nationally as well as regionally.

Although the Alexius L. Middleton house has lost a fair amount of its historic materials it yet retains a good deal of its historic character and setting. Nestled in an agricultural pocket surrounded by contemporary development, the Middleton Family homes including the Alexius L. Middleton House, Henry Dyer Middleton House (CH-615), and the Thomas A. Middleton Property (CH-610) are excellent surviving resources of the area's rural heritage.
